The Stakes and Effects of Perpetual Education Reform

Dr. Amanda Lashaw is a Visiting Assistant Professor of Liberal Studies at St. Mary's College of California. Her research interests include urban education movements, history and politics of school reform, conceptions of racial and economic inequity in education, professional reformers, NGO/nonprofit practices, ethnographic methodology, and critical social theory. She is currently writing about the ways that education reformers establish the moral authority of a movement for educational equity. She earned her Ph.D. from UC Berkeley, in Social and Cultural Studies in Education.
