Dr. Booker will discuss a set of community-based research projects with youth and families with attention to opportunities for mutual ethical development alongside methodological approaches to participatory design research. Varied scales of relational work circulate through community-based research projects (from individual positionality to cross-organization and institutional partnership), and these intersections raise questions, tensions, challenges, and opportunities. In what ways can we navigate potentials for change alongside persistent marginalization, and where can our methodological work help us critically and persistently engage power relations that flow around us and through us?
