“Cultivating Diverse University Collaborations to Work Toward Educational Equity in Higher Education”

Obtaining a degree is fraught with challenges as college settings continue to produce and reproduce inequities for particular student populations (e.g., low-income, first-generation, students of color). To address these inequities requires involvement and investment from key institutional stakeholders (e.g., program staff, faculty researchers, graduate students) and rigorous scientific approaches. This conversation includes examples of researcher-practitioner collaborations designed to unpack the structural conditions that undermine parity in student outcomes and to inform meaningful change in everyday institutional practices.
